BLACK REPRISAL

All hopes were on the first elections in the old African colony. They were to produce a long-awaited change which would place power in the hands of the black majority. No one expected what happened the day after the elections. The winning party abolished the recent Constitution, suspended all civil rights and declared a state of siege.

Decades of oppression and ethnic discrimination had led only to a period of brutal reprisals… The white districts, which had always been heavily protected, were attacked. Houses were looted and any owners who had not had time to flee were arrested.

The international community responded in its customary manner, by ignoring the situation. The poverty-stricken country was left with no legal mechanisms to control its own citizens, who invented their own justice.

The People's Tribunals, with authority to try the white minority only, sentenced people to one of two possible punishments: execution, or hard labour for life. This is the story of a prison that the new regime set up for the thousands of white prisoners. It was a very special prison. It was only for white women.

Just like in the good old colonial days...
